Fortunately that particular telegraph line was not in operation on the night in question or far more serious results would probably have to be recorded. It was found that near the junction of the Szechuen and Hankow Roads. an ignorant coolie or native workman employed by the Electric Company, finding the light wire and the telegraph line too close together, had tied the light wire with a plece of stout string up to a higher telegraph line. While the weather remained dry no evil consequences ensued, but a shower of rain wetting the string transformed it into a perfect conductor, and the terrific ourrent from the light wire passed into the telegraph line in cuestion. We are informed that had the line in the telegraph office been working that night, the instrument probably would have been broken to pieces and the operator using it instantly killed or the place set on fire. Such a current as that communicated by the electric light wire would be sufficient, we are told, even to fuse the sables : but as it was, no harm was done beyond a delay in the telegraph service of a couple of hours. The Telegraph Companies have submitted certain rules to be observed by the Electric Company abridged from those enforced by the Board of Trade at home in the matter of setting up electric light wires in streets and ros s. On the northern shore of the Daddon estuary, in the county of Camberland, there has been steadily worked during the last twenty years or more an important mine, producing a large quantity of rich red hematite iron. This mine is owned by the Hodbarrow Mining Company. who are proprietors of the land, the mineral rights being leased to them by the Earl Lonsdale. The ore having been excavated or "won" as close to the sea margin as it has been possible to work without letting down the surface of the land and admitting the influx of the sea, thereby drowning the mine, the company have recently obtained a fresh lease from Lord Lonsdale, undertaking to construct a barrier to keep back the sea slong that portion of the estuary in front of the mine, in order that they might" win" the ore from underneath some twenty-six acres of the sea-bed. To effect this object (says the Times) a massive and substantial sea barrier has now been constructed. This great sea-barrier presents an imposing appearance. It is just two-thirdsof a mile in length, and for about one-half this length is fully 50 ft. in height from the bottom of the foundations to the top of the parapet. At high-water of highspring-tides there is a depth of rather more than 20 ft. against the seaward face of the work; but, being exposed during south-westerly gales to the full force of the waves sweeping up the Trish Channel, backed by the Atlantic rollers, the sea lie at such times breaks with great violence against ra the new barrier, as was, of course, expected and has been provided for in the structure just completed. The engineer of the work, is Sir John Coods, and the contractors are the well-known firm of Messre. Lucas and Aird. There is every reason to believe that the anticipations of the directors and shareholders of being able to continue the wor ing of the iron ore over a further period of twenty-five years may be realized, thus giving employment during that time to about
